ARTICLE III OF THE CONSTITUTION.

ELIGIBILITY AND ADMISSION.

SECTION 1.—Any woman may be eligible for membership who is of the age of eighteen years, and who is descended from a man or woman who, with unfailing loyalty, rendered material aid to the cause of Independence; from a recognized patriot, a soldier or sailor or a civil officer in one of the several Colonies or States, or of the United Colonies or States; provided that the applicant be acceptable to the Society.

SEC. 2.—Every applicant for membership must be endorsed by at least one member of the National Society, and her application shall then be submitted to the Registrars-General, who shall report on the question of eligibility to the General Board of Management, when the question of admission shall be voted upon by the Board by ballot, and if a majority of said Board approve such application, the applicant, after payment of the initiation fee, shall be enrolled as a member of the National Society.

When the applicant derives eligibility of membership by descent from more than one ancestor, and it is desired to take advantage thereof, the history of each of said ancestor's services and the intermediate generations of the pedigree may all be written upon these pages.

State fully such documentary or other authority as you found the following record upon, and also the residence of ancestors if known.

My ancestor's services in assisting in the establishment of American Independence during the War of the Revolution were as follows:

Jabez Thompson served in the first regiment raised on the first call for troops from Derby Connecticut, by the Legislature in April and May 1775. This regiment was recruited in New Haven County. It marched, by order of Provincial Authorities and the Continental Congress, to New York to New York in the latter part of June, and encamped at Harlem. It took part in operations along Lakes George and Champlain, also assisted in reduction of St. Johns. Jabez Thompson was commissioned May 10th as 1st Major. He was also Captain of Third company, which served at the Siege of Boston. He was discharged in December 1775, and was afterwards in the Militia service in 1776. He was Lieutenant Colonel commanding the Second regiment which was composed of companies from Derby, New Haven etc. He was killed in the retreat from New York, on September 15th 1776. His residence was in Derby, Connecticut. He and his wife were received

Origin of the Gray Name

Home Page

The name Gray originated from the name of a place in Burgundy, France where in the department of Haute-Saone, there is now a town called Gray. It originally was called Croy. A Norman chief named Rolf, Rollo, or Raol invaded France with his Norwegian followers and established himself in the ninth century. A descendant or member of this family became Chamberlain to Robert, Duke of Normandy, and received from him the Castle and Honor of Croy, from which the family assumed the name of DeCroy. This was changed afterward to DeGray and eventually to Gray without the prefix. The Grays migrated from France to England with William the Conqueror in 1066, for among the names of those inscribed at the Battle Abbey after the Battle of Hastings was of J. DeGray.

Many of the proudest titles of England have for centuries been borne by the Gray family. A sister of Henry VIII married the duke of Suffolk, who was of that family, and their daughter, Lady Jane Gray, wore for a few days the Crown of England, her life being the price of the undesired honor.

From 1620 to 1720, twenty or more distinct family's of Grays came to America, a fact which accounts in part for the difficulty of tracing the ancestry of the immense number of that name.

The Grays came to America early. They were at Plymouth, Boston and Salem among the first settlers. It is said that Mrs. Desire Kent, daughter of Edward Gray, was the first woman to step ashore at Plymouth rock.
There were Grays among the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians who came in 1719 and subsequently from the north of Ireland.
The first of the name recorded in Scotland is Hugo de Gray, witnessed in a charter by Walter de Lundin in around 1248.
According to "Scots Kith and Kin", Clan Gray (Grey) was in the Fife area in the 13th Century.

Sir Andrew Gray was one of the first to scale the rock of Edinburgh Castle when it was taken from the English in 1312.

The son of Lord Gray of Fowlis (circa 1490) was purportedly forced to flee to the north of Scotland after killing the Constable of Dundee. The principle possession of the Grays of the north was Skibo but they also held Sordell and Ardnish.
Lord Gray was Lord Justice General of Scotland in 1506.

Maitland's interview with Elizabeth took place in London, in the presence of both Cecil, Elizabeth's adviser, and Dudley, her favourite. The Scottish point of view on the subject of the succession had already been put to Elizabeth in a humble letter from Lord James, before Mary even arrived in Scotland. Ratification of the Treaty of Edinburgh was to be given in exchange for Elizabeth's acknowledgement that Mary stood next in line to the throne, after herself and her lawful issue. Maitland pointed out on behalf of Mary that this meant that she could not ratify the Treaty of Edinburgh as it now stood, because the terms of the Treaty called on to surrender not only her present claim to the English throne, but also all further claims after the death of Elizabeth and her problematic offspring. In reply, Elizabeth showed herself nothing if not friendly towards the queen of Scots; although her first impulse was to concentrate on the vexed subject of the treaty ('I looked for another message from the Queen your sovereign') once she realized that the Scots lords, as well as Mary, were in earnest on the subject of succession, she gave herself over to a frank discussion of the whole question.

In the course of this, Elizabeth even went so far as to vouchsafe the information that she herself preferred Mary to all her rivals: she knew of no better right than Mary's, and no one who was strong enough to keep Mary from the throne. At the same time she positively declined to give Mary the acknowledgement she desired. The reason she gave was the impossible burden which it would lay on her own relations with Mary. 'The desire is without example,' said Elizabeth, 'to require me in mine own life, to set my winding sheet before my eyes. Think you that I could love my own winding sheet? Princes cannot like their own children, those that should succeed unto them. . . . How then shall I, think you, like my cousin, being declared my Heir Apparent?' She also put forward a more practical, less personal reason of her own safety: 'I know the inconstancy of the people of England, how they ever mislike the present government and have their eyes fixed upon that person that is next to succeed.' And she quoted in Latin: 'They are more prone to worship the rising than the setting sun.' Elizabeth went on to describe her own experiences as a focus of opposition during the reign of Mary Tudor. With these personal revelations, and an unresolved situation, Maitland had to be content. However, Elizabeth made one concession in that she agreed to accept a certain modification of the treaty, so that Mary should not have to sign away her claim, beyond the period of Elizabeth's life and that of her lawful offspring. Elizabeth also suggested that Maitland and Cecil should correspond privately on the subject, although under the supervision of the two queens;

the situation, if fluid, seemed also full of promise. This auspicious atmosphere Maitland returned to Scotland at the end of September.

The truth was that Elizabeth was in a more complicated situation apropos her successor than might appear from a first glance at the Tudor family tree. Mary Stuart, the obvious successor, had as we have seen been theoretically debarred by the will of Henry VIII, which precluded foreigners from succeeding. Maitland, in the course of his mission, did not enter into controversy concerning the will of Henry VIII, but merely made the point that Henry VII, in wedding Margaret Tudor to James IV, had not intended to deny her the succession; Elizabeth herself, by saying that she knew of no better right than Mary's, showed that she was not allowing her father's will to enter her calculations. But in 1561 Mary was extremely unpopular in England, being considered virtually a Frenchwoman and a Guise, as well as a Catholic, and she was especially disliked by the English Parliament, which was strongly Puritan in tone; Elizabeth, in her personal favour towards Mary, was certainly in contradiction to the majority of her subjects at this period. There were other claimants, whom the English as a body might be thought to prefer: Margaret, countess of Lennox, mother of Darnley, was a grand-daughter of Henry VII; although her claim was inferior to Mary's as she descended from Margaret Tudor's second marriage, yet she was an English subject, which gave her an advantage in some English eyes. On the other hand her legitimacy could be questioned, since her father Archibald Angus had divorced her mother on grounds of precontract. Then there was the twenty-five-year-old Henry Hastings, earl of Huntingdon, who descended from the countess of Salisbury, niece of Edward IV, and last representative of the Plantagenets. His strength was in his sex – in 1560 the Spanish ambassador de Quadra reported: 'the cry is that they do not want any more women rulers.'[18] He was also Dudley's brother-in-law, he was a Protestant, and was lieutenant for Leicestershire where he had strong connections.

By far the most serious counter-claimant was Lady Catherine Grey, the twenty-three-year-old sister of the ill-fated Lady Jane Grey. Catherine Grey, like Mary Stuart, was a great-grand-daughter of Henry VII, but she descended from his young daughter Mary Tudor who had married the Duke of Suffolk. By 1561 Lady Catherine had already led a checkered matrimonial career, by which she had incurred the spiteful enmity and personal dislike of Queen Elizabeth. Her first marriage to Lord Pembroke's son was dissolved. She then secretly married Lord Hertford in late 1560, but without the queen's permission, which had been made necessary by an act of 1536. In the summer of 1561, her obvious pregnancy forced her to admit to the marriage, as a result of which both she and Hertford were clapped in the Tower. On 24 September, at roughly the same moment as Maitland's mission to Elizabeth on behalf of Mary, she gave birth to a son, Edward Seymour. This piece of unwelcome parturition roused Elizabeth to a pitch of vindictive fury. She referred to the unpleasant subject bitterly to Maitland when she alluded to those who, by showing themselves not to be barren, had declared to the world that they were more worthy of the throne than herself or Mary. Elizabeth had both mother and father cross-examined, and as they could provide no witnesses of their wedding or find the priest involved, the marriage was finally declared invalid in May 1562. Despite this stern lesson in the unwisdom of illicit romance, the unhappy Lady Catherine managed to have sufficient contact with her husband within the confines of the Tower to give birth to a second son Thomas in February 1563. By the findings of Elizabeth's commission, both these sons were of course illegitimate, somewhat reducing Lady Catherine's desirability as a candidate for the throne.

Nevertheless in the 1560s it was Lady Catherine who was regarded as the most likely successor to Elizabeth by the English Parliament, on the grounds that she was Protestant and she was English. So strong were her claims thought to be that Philip II of Spain is even supposed to have worked out a scheme by which he would have abducted her, in 1560, and married her off to that famous putative bridegroom Don Carlos, in order to establish her immediately on the throne of England, on the grounds that she was legitimate, and Elizabeth was not.[19] However, when Lady Catherine was revealed to be a Protestant, Philip lost interest in her. Mary Stuart on the other hand was the subject of various English attacks at this period. 'Garboduc' attacked her right to succeed as an alien; in the Parliament of January 1563 Sadler made a speech against Mary the foreigner succeeding to the throne: 'Our common people and the very stones in the streets should rebel against it.' In October 1562, when Elizabeth was gravely ill with smallpox, de Quadra reported that there was absolutely no certainty about the succession, the Protestants being divided between Catherine Grey and Huntingdon, and the Catholics between Mary and Margaret Lennox. Under the circumstances it is easy to understand why Mary believed that the personal favour of Elizabeth constituted her best hope of being recognized. Mary believed that Elizabeth could and would override the will of Henry VIII. Elizabeth's dislike of Catherine was blighting her chances. Elizabeth's love of Mary – if it was sufficiently stimulated – might be the making of her fortunes. Throughout the autumn and spring, Mary devoted all her efforts to bringing about the personal meeting between the two queens, by which she felt certain she could win the all-important affections of Elizabeth.

Mary was not deluding herself on the subject. In the opinion of one of Elizabeth's modern biographers, Sir John Neale, 'There is no resisting the conclusion that Elizabeth was prepared virtually to assure Mary of the succession, assure her of it on conditions that are easy to guess: no league with France, friendship with England, an acceptable marriage, and probably ultimate conversion to Protestantism'.[20] The first three of these conditions would not have been difficult to fulfil for a Mary so set on being acknowledged as heiress, and the last one lay only in the sphere of possibilities. The important point, which Mary had ably grasped, was that she herself should inspire Elizabeth with confidence, so that she would be armoured by Elizabeth's favour against the hostility of the English Parliament, and presumably many of the English Protestants. By far the best way of inspiring this confidence was to meet the English queen face to face: had she not won the golden opinions of Throckmorton? Surely it would be no more difficult to win the affections of Elizabeth, with whom she had in common not only their cousinly relationship, but also the mutual problems of government in the hands of the weaker sex. As she had told Bedford, when she was first widowed: 'We are both in one isle, both of one language, both the nearest kinswoman that each other hath, and both Queens'.[21] In view of Mary's known success in the sphere of personal contact, her steady aim to meet Elizabeth must be regarded not as the caprice of an inquisitive woman, but as a sound piece of political reasoning.

Once Maitland was back in Scotland, he corresponded with Cecil for the rest of the autumn and winter, according to Queen Elizabeth's suggestion. At the same time Elizabeth herself sent Sir Peter Mewtas to Scotland, officially to greet Mary on her arrival in Scotland, unofficially to demand ratification of the treaty. Mary diplomatically suggested in reply that as so many matters in the treaty had concerned her late husband, the whole subject should be considered anew: in November she put forward the names of new commissioners. All Mary's letters to Elizabeth throughout this period have the same attitude of friendliness which would seem positively sugary to our ears, were it not for the high stakes which were to be won by cajolery. Mary means 'nothing more earnestly than continuance of tender amity and good intelligence' between the two of them; she finds that Mewtas has 'so wisely and discreetly uttered and expressed the sincerity of your [Elizabeth's] affection towards us'.[22]

Elizabeth still evinced a personal desire that the whole affair should be conducted secretly, or through the medium of Randolph; thus on 23

MARY STUART REMEMBERED

A PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Mary Stuart Rhodes

In the course of this, Elizabeth even went so far as to vouchsafe the information that she herself preferred Mary to all her rivals: she knew of no better right than Mary's, and no one who was strong enough to keep Mary from the throne. At the same time she positively declined to give Mary the acknowledgement she desired. The reason she gave was the impossible burden which it would lay on her own relations with Mary. 'The desire is without example,' said Elizabeth, 'to require me in mine own life, to set my winding sheet before my eyes. Think you that I could love my own winding sheet? Princes cannot like their own children, those that should succeed unto them. . . . How then shall I, think you, like my cousin, being declared my Heir Apparent?' She also put forward a more practical, less personal reason of her own safety: 'I know the inconstancy of the people of England, how they ever mislike the present government and have their eyes fixed upon that person that is next to succeed.' And she quoted in Latin: 'They are more prone to worship the rising than the setting sun.' Elizabeth went on to describe her own experiences as a focus of opposition during the reign of Mary Tudor. With these personal revelations, and an unresolved situation, Maitland had to be content. However, Elizabeth made one concession in that she agreed to accept a certain modification of the treaty, so that Mary should not have to sign away her claim, beyond the period of Elizabeth's life and that of her lawful offspring. Elizabeth also suggested that Maitland and Cecil should correspond privately on the subject, although under the supervision of the two queens; the situation, if fluid, seemed also full of promise. In this auspicious atmosphere Maitland returned to Scotland at the end of September.

The truth was that Elizabeth was in a more complicated situation apropos her successor than might appear from a first glance at the Tudor family tree. Mary Stuart, the obvious successor, had as we have seen been theoretically debarred by the will of Henry VIII, which precluded foreigners from succeeding. Maitland, in the course of his mission, did not enter into controversy concerning the will of Henry VIII, but merely made the point that Henry VII, in wedding Margaret Tudor to James IV, had not intended to deny her the succession; Elizabeth herself, by saying that she knew of no better right than Mary's, showed that she was not allowing her father's will to enter her calculations. But in 1561 Mary was extremely unpopular in England, being considered virtually a Frenchwoman and a Guise, as well as a Catholic, and she was especially disliked by the English Parliament, which was strongly Puritan in tone; Elizabeth, in her personal favour towards Mary, was certainly in contradiction to the majority of her subjects at this period. There were other claimants, whom the English as a body might be thought to prefer: Margaret, countess of Lennox, mother of Darnley, was a grand-daughter of Henry VII; although her claim was inferior to Mary's as she descended from Margaret Tudor's second marriage, yet she was an English subject, which gave her an advantage in some English eyes. On the other hand her legitimacy could be questioned, since her father Archibald Angus had divorced her mother on grounds of pre-contract. Then there was the twenty-five-year-old Henry Hastings, earl of Huntingdon, who descended from the countess of Salisbury, niece of Edward IV, and last representative of the Plantagenets. His strength was in his sex—in 1560 the Spanish ambassador de Quadra reported: 'the cry is that they do not want any more women rulers.'[18] He was also Dudley's brother-in-law, he was a Protestant, and was lieutenant for Leicestershire where he had strong connections.

By far the most serious counter-claimant was Lady Catherine Grey, the twenty-three-year-old sister of the ill-fated Lady Jane Grey. Catherine Grey, like Mary Stuart, was a great-grand-daughter of Henry VII, but she descended from his young daughter Mary Tudor who had married the Duke of Suffolk. By 1561 Lady Catherine had already led a checkered matrimonial career, by which she had incurred the spiteful enmity and personal dislike of Queen Elizabeth. Her first marriage to Lord Pembroke's son was dissolved. She then secretly married Lord Hertford in late 1560, but without the queen's permission, which had been made necessary by an act of 1536. In the summer of 1561, her obvious pregnancy forced her to admit to the marriage, as a result of which both she and Hertford were clapped in the Tower. On 24 September, at roughly the same moment as Maitland's mission to Elizabeth on behalf of Mary, she gave birth to a son, Edward Seymour. This piece of unwelcome parturition roused Elizabeth to a pitch of vindictive fury. She referred to the unpleasant subject bitterly to Maitland when she alluded to those who, by showing themselves not to be barren, had declared to the world that they were more worthy of the throne than herself or Mary. Elizabeth had both mother and father cross-examined, and as they could provide no witnesses of their wedding or find the priest involved, the marriage was finally declared invalid in May 1562. Despite this stern lesson in the unwisdom of illicit romance, the unhappy Lady Catherine managed to have sufficient contact with her husband within the confines of the Tower to give birth to a second son Thomas in February 1563. By the findings of Elizabeth's commission, both these sons were of course illegitimate, somewhat reducing Lady Catherine's desirability as a candidate for the throne.

Nevertheless in the 1560s it was Lady Catherine who was regarded as the most likely successor to Elizabeth by the English Parliament, on the grounds that she was Protestant and she was English. So strong were her claims thought to be that Philip II of Spain is even supposed to have worked out a scheme by which he would have abducted her, in 1560, and married her off to that famous putative bridegroom Don Carlos, in order to establish her immediately on the throne of England, on the grounds that she was legitimate, and Elizabeth was not.[19] However, when Lady Catherine was revealed to be a Protestant, Philip lost interest in her. Mary Stuart on the other hand was the subject of various English attacks at this period. 'Garboduc', attacked her right to succeed as an alien; in the Parliament of January 1563 Sadler made a speech against Mary the foreigner succeeding to the throne: 'Our common people and the very stones in the streets should rebel against it.' In October 1562, when Elizabeth was gravely ill with smallpox, de Quadra reported that there was absolutely no certainty about the succession, the Protestants being divided between Catherine Grey and Huntingdon, and the Catholics between Mary and Margaret Lennox. Under the circumstances it is easy to understand why Mary believed that the personal favour of Elizabeth constituted her best hope of being recognized. Mary believed that Elizabeth could and would override the will of Henry VIII. Elizabeth's dislike of Catherine was blighting her chances. Elizabeth's love of Mary—if it was sufficiently stimulated—might be the making of her fortunes. Throughout the autumn and spring, Mary devoted all her efforts to bringing about the personal meeting between the two queens, by which she felt certain she could win the all-important affections of Elizabeth.

Mary was not deluding herself on the subject. In the opinion of one of Elizabeth's modern biographers, Sir John Neale, 'There is no resisting the conclusion that Elizabeth was prepared virtually to assure Mary of the succession, assure her of it on conditions that are easy to guess: no league with France, friendship with England, an acceptable marriage, and probably ultimate conversion to Protestantism'.[20] The first three of these conditions would not have been difficult to fulfil for a Mary so set on being acknowledged as heiress, and the last one lay only in the sphere of possibilities. The important point, which Mary had ably grasped, was that she herself should inspire Elizabeth with confidence, so that she would be armoured by Elizabeth's favour against the hostility of the English Parliament, and presumably many of the English Protestants. By far the best way of inspiring this confidence was to meet the English queen face to face: had she not won the golden opinions of Throckmorton? Surely it would be no more difficult to win the affections of Elizabeth, with whom she had in common not only their cousinly relationship, but also the mutual problems of government in the hands of the weaker sex. As she had told Bedford, when she was first widowed: 'We are both in one isle, both of one language, both the nearest kinswoman that each other hath, and both Queens'.[21] In view of Mary's known success in the sphere of personal contact, her steady aim to meet Elizabeth must be regarded not as the caprice of an inquisitive woman, but as a sound piece of political reasoning.

Once Maitland was back in Scotland, he corresponded with Cecil for the rest of the autumn and winter, according to Queen Elizabeth's suggestion. At the same time Elizabeth herself sent Sir Peter Mewtas to Scotland, officially to greet Mary on her arrival in Scotland, unofficially to demand ratification of the treaty. Mary diplomatically suggested in reply that as so many matters in the treaty had concerned her late husband, the whole subject should be considered anew: in November she put forward the names of new commissioners. All Mary's letters to Elizabeth throughout this period have the same attitude of friendliness which would seem positively sugary to our ears, were it not for the high stakes which were to be won their heroism, their fineness of spirit which made them, paradoxically, for all their attitude to the new official religion of the country, among the most admirable of the Elizabethans. But to the prudent Cecil, the possible reactions of the English Catholics to Mary had to be taken into account.

Taken all in all, the most politic course from the English point of view was to temporize, until sufficient assessment had been made of the interior situation of Scotland. In the long run, Elizabeth felt, it would probably be wisest to despatch Mary back to her difficult subjects, rather than let her loose in either England or France, and furthermore there was that other consideration that subjects should not be encouraged to rebel against queens. But of course there was no question of restoring Mary by the force of an English army; the terms on which the Scots would accept Mary back would have to be discovered by cautious enquiries—and, if possible, negotiated to Elizabeth's own advantage. In the meantime it would be best to keep Mary in the north not exactly a prisoner, but not exactly free, not exactly debarred for ever from Elizabeth's presence, but certainly not welcomed into it.* The only course which was emphatically to be debarred to Mary was that of seeking French help: as Elizabeth's instructions of 18 May stated, Mary was to be told plainly that as Elizabeth intended to assist her herself, any attempt on the Scottish queen's part to bring in the French as well would be regarded as merely renewing old quarrels.[14] Fortunately Mary had not arrived in England with an unbesmirched reputation: there was that unresolved matter of Darnley's death, and the scandal she had caused by marrying the chief suspect. The cloud of old scandal round Mary's head now provided a convenient excuse for putting her off from Elizabeth's presence, until she should have been cleared of all guilt. And in such a work of arbitration, who would be more suitable to act as judge between Mary's cause and that of her nobles than the English queen herself?

Queen Elizabeth's next move was to send her trusted

* From the point of view of the succession, there was something to be said for having Elizabeth's nearest relative under lock and key; acting on this principle, the emperors of Ethiopia used to incarcerate all the princes of blood royal on a mountain near Gondar, until the time came for one of them to succeed.

counsellor, Sir Francis Knollys, north to treat with her guest-captive along these delicate lines. Knollys was the husband of Catherine Grey, Lord Hunsdon's sister, who was Elizabeth's first cousin through the Boleyns, as well as being her intimate friend. The Knollys had an enormous family, to whom Sir Francis was a punctilious father. He was now about fifty-five, a man of the highest honour, and a leading Puritan, who had fled to Germany during the reign of Mary Tudor. Despite their religious differences, Mary made an immediately favourable impression upon this experienced courtier. He discovered in her a woman of innate intelligence, blessed with an eloquent tongue and full of practical good sense; to these qualities, she also joined considerable personal courage. A little later, when he felt he knew her better, Knollys ventured on a further and even more favourable character sketch of the Scottish queen:[15] to begin with she was a 'notable woman' because she had no care for ceremonies beyond the acknowledgement of her royal estate (possibly a sly dig at Queen Elizabeth); then she spoke freely to everyone, whatever their rank and 'showeth a disposition to speak much and to be bold and to be pleasant to be very familiar'. Furthermore not only was she brave herself, but she was also delighted by valour in others, 'commending by name all approved hardy men of her country, although they be her enemies, and she concealeth no cowardice even in her friends'. In short, 'For victory's sake pain and peril seem pleasant to her and in respect of victory, wealth and all other things seem to her contemptible and vile'. Knollys metaphorically scratched his head as he concluded by wondering what on earth was to be done with such a spirited creature: Was 'such a lady and princess' to be nourished in the English bosom? He questioned his correspondents in London whether it was indeed 'wise to dissemble with such a lady'.

The answer came back from the south that it was indeed wise to dissemble, since it was for the moment the most politically advantageous course open to the English. Knollys was therefore instructed to tell Queen Mary that she could not be received at the English court until she had been purged of the stain of her husband's murder, and this purgation could only be achieved if she submitted herself to the judgement of Elizabeth. Tears flowed from Mary's eyes at the news; in a passion of rage at the injustice, were pains, said to be the result of 'windy matter ascending to the head' strong enough to make her faint.[11] Even a move from odious Tutbury to the more salubrious Shrewsbury dwelling of Wingfield Manor did not effect the desired cure. At the end of April, the queen went into such a decline at hearing of the dreadful fates of some of her friends in Scotland that her whole face swelled up and she sat weeping silently and uncontrollably at supper. By 12 May the queen was critically ill once more; at Chatsworth—'my wife's house', as Shrewsbury put it—where she was taken for the cleansing or 'sweetening' of Wingfield, she had to be seen by two doctors.[12] As it happened Shrewsbury's own health suffered that summer, for he had both gout and 'the hot ague', to the extent of announcing that he no longer wished to live; his physician Dr Francis was deeply concerned over the many hot choleric vapours which had apparently found their way up to the patient's head from his stomach, when Shrewsbury took a fever after drinking too much cold water. But whereas Shrewsbury suffered occasionally from bouts of painful ill-health, Queen Mary's health now became a chronic problem for her and her jailers, only exacerbated by the conditions of captivity, and there are few of her letters in the ensuing years which do not refer in some manner to the physical pain she had to endure.

It was at the end of February 1569 that Nicholas White, who was journeying to Ireland on Cecil's behalf, broke his journey at Tutbury in order to report on the state of the Scottish queen. From his letter back to his master, it is clear that he found her as dangerously fascinating as had Knollys nine months earlier—although White, like Knox, had a rather less chivalrous reaction to the spectacle of her beguiling charms.[13] He too observed that the queen spent much of her time embroidering, telling him that 'all the day she wrought with her needle and that the diversity of colours made the time seem less tedious'. They also had a pleasantly intellectual discussion on the comparative artistic merits of carving, painting and embroidering, in the course of which Queen Mary expressed the view that painting was the most commendable of the three. At which White, who had already unpleasantly and most unfairly told Mary that she was responsible for the death of Lady Knollys by keeping Sir Francis away from her side (although there was surely nothing Mary would have liked better than for Knollys's duties to have been ended by her own release), replied rudely that he had read that painting was a false truth—Veritas Falsa. Mary understandably drew the audience to a close at this brusqueness, and withdrew to her own room.

Nevertheless for all his churlishness—and he may have feared to be seduced by this famous basilisk—White fully took in the physical appearance of Mary, informing Cecil that he found her hair dark, although Knollys had warned him that she often wore false hair of different colours.* And the percipient White added: 'She hath withal an alluring grace, a pretty Scotch accent, and a searching wit, clouded with mildness: Fame might move some to relieve her, and glory joined with gain might stir others to adventure much for her sake.'

White's words concerning the inducements there would be to rescue Mary were prophetic. Indeed, already the thought of 'glory joined with gain' had led Norfolk to go forward in the negotiations to marry the Scottish queen, the project first mentioned to Mary before the York conference. Mary's captivity in England had after all no legal basis, and even her abdication from the throne of Scotland had been made under duress, which robbed it of its validity; in the meantime her blood relationship to Queen Elizabeth, and her possible succession to the English throne—cast into further prominence by the death in 1568 of the unfortunate Lady Catherine Grey, the main Protestant Tudor candidate—made her a rich prize. Elizabeth's disapproval was by no means a foregone conclusion: after all she herself had suggested Norfolk as a possible bridegroom for Mary before her marriage to Darnley. Under these circumstances the secret moves to marry Mary to Norfolk, and then presumably restore her to the throne of Scotland, neatly linked to a Protestant English bridegroom, proceeded apace. Maitland was involved, and shares with Mary's envoy, John Leslie, bishop of Ross, the possible credit or discredit for having first initiated the plan; many of the Scots were said to look on the scheme with favour, and even Moray himself appeared to play along with the sort Norfolk. These were rash and treasonable schemes indeed. There were many difficulties in the way of their being carried out—the principal one being, as Philip II was quick to notice, that there was no proof that there would be another Catholic rising within England. Yet Philip stipulated that there should be no Spanish invasion until the English themselves had risen. In the meantime Alva formed the lowest opinion of Ridolfi, whom he termed a gran parlaquina or chatterbox, and a lightweight; as late as September 1571 he wrote to Philip from the Netherlands with a sarcastic lack of respect for Ridolfi's ability to carry out any sort of practical scheme, that even if Philip and Elizabeth jointly agreed to the invasions it still would not be sure that Ridolfi would be able to carry it through! Alva also analysed with terrible correctness the danger, to both Norfolk and the queen of Scots, if such a scheme was discovered or miscarried: either or both might lose their lives.[29]

Mary's attitude to, and personal involvement in Ridolfi's schemes is open to question. She had not lost interest in Elizabeth's projects for her restoration to Scotland, which still dragged on. In October 1570, Cecil and Mildmay paid Mary a personal visit at Sheffield Castle, possibly spurred on by the king of France's representations to Elizabeth on the subject of Mary. They put before Mary a long list of articles proposing an alliance between herself and Elizabeth. Many of these articles reiterated the familiar English position since the abortive Treaty of Edinburgh: Mary was to give up her unlawful claims to the English throne. In addition Mary was to give up bargaining over her remarriage without Elizabeth's consent, and the question of James coming to England as a hostage if Mary was restored to Scotland was officially incorporated. In the course of their discussion, Cecil showed himself not immune to the famous charm of the queen of Scots: in a memoir of 1569 he had already referred to 'her cunning and sugared entertainment of all men' whereby she won many to her cause; now a personal experience of this sweetness led him to agree with Maitland: 'The Queen of Scots was of a clement and gentle nature, and was disposed to be governed by counsel of them in whom she reposed her trust.' Leslie, who reported this favourable verdict, even thought that Cecil had promised to bring Mary at last into Elizabeth's presence. Yet nothing concrete ever actually happened as a result of these articles, and by the spring of 1571 Mary was writing wearily to Sussex that she seemed to have been looking for a happy resolution to her affairs for so long 'which has been so many times delayed for every light matter that did occur, that we are for our own part in doubt if finally there shall be any good succeed unto us therein'.[30]

It is possible that under these circumstances of three years' onerous English captivity, Mary did allow herself to be persuaded to write the incriminating instructions and letters to Ridolfi quoted against her at Norfolk's trial. The originals of the credentials said to be given to Ridolfi by Mary and Norfolk have mysteriously disappeared.* In these instructions Mary wrote wildly concerning the miserable state of England, the cruelty of her own position, the persecutions of the Catholics, the fact that Huntingdon and Hertford (Catherine Grey's son) were threatening her rights to the English throne, the need for the Pope to press ahead with her nullity suit, and how she intended to send James to Spain to marry him to a Spanish princess. Norfolk was described as being the head of the enterprise, and a keen guardian of the rights of the Catholics. All practical details were to be left to him; furthermore Mary castigated the French who had, she said, done absolutely nothing to help her.[31] However, the evidence of Mary's other letters, written at the same time to Mothe de la Fénelon, the French ambassador, show that she was, to say the least of it, trying to keep all the options open. She had, for example, far from given up all hopes of French assistance and in October twice approached the ambassador begging him to continue to help her and to interest the king and queen of France in her cause 'because she had no means to help herself'.[32] Nor had Mary in any way despaired of Elizabeth's assistance: for at the same moment as her approaches to Mothe de la Fénelon, Mary was writing to the English queen, stating the full confidence she felt in Elizabeth, and her desire to have her (Mary's) succession rights discussed in the English Parliament.[33] Subsequently Mary did admit to having given some sort of financial commission to Ridolfi, but she al-

these charges Mary replied firmly that as a sovereign princess she could not recognize their jurisdiction over her; she requested to appear before the English Parliament to justify herself, and once more demanded to be taken into the presence of Elizabeth. In detailed answer to the charges, the queen freely admitted that she had written to the king of France, the king of Spain and the Pope and others asking for help, in order to be set at liberty and restored to her own country. She admitted the original offence of bearing the English title, when she had been a girl of seventeen, but denied ever bearing it since the death of Francis, over eleven years ago, which was correct. Over the Norfolk marriage, she reiterated her genuine belief that the match had been to the general liking of England. She admitted having given a commission to Ridolfi but said that it had been of a financial nature, and strongly denied any more compromising schemes with the Italian.[38]

Despite the Scottish queen's dignity, it was the will of Queen Elizabeth, not the answers of Queen Mary, which stayed the hand of the Commons against her in the summer of 1572. Elizabeth personally prevented the Commons from passing a bill of attainder on the Scottish queen; instead a bill was passed merely depriving Mary of her right to succeed to the English throne, and declaring her liable to a trial by peers (peers of the English realm, rather than her own peers, or equals, who would be sovereigns), should she be discovered plotting again. Most unfortunately the publication of the papal bull, Regnans in Excelsis, although not sought by Mary, and not even intended by Pius V to assist her personally, since he disapproved of her marriage to Bothwell, had begun the process of presenting her as a foreign traitor in their midst to English patriots. The massacre of the Huguenots on St Bartholomew's Day, 24 August 1572, at the hands of the French Catholics, led by the Guises, although once again hardly any fault of the prisoner of Sheffield Castle, only increased Mary's unpopularity in England. 'All men now cry out of [against] your prisoner,' wrote Cecil ominously to Shrewsbury. But Elizabeth would not allow this tide of xenophobia to sweep away her 'good sister and cousin', in spite of all the revelations of Ridolfi.

In the strange tortuous map of Mary's relations with Elizabeth, and Elizabeth's with Mary, Mary's feelings are much better charted than those of Elizabeth, since she gave many open declarations on the subject. But just as Elizabeth's incarceration of Mary on evidence she herself declared to be insufficient is greatly to her discredit, her preservation of Mary Stuart's life in 1572 by personal intervention must be allowed to be to her credit. Elizabeth, like Mary, had a constitutional dislike of spilling blood. Perhaps both of them were reacting against their bloodthirsty Tudor ancestors. Elizabeth was also conscious that Mary was by now by far her closest adult relation, since the sons of the dead Catherine Grey were still boys, and James was not only a mere child, but a child in control of the Scots; Elizabeth may have had some reluctance to abandon her kingdom to the care of young children (which had proved so fatal in the case of Scotland) if the assassin should find her as he had found Moray. Most of all, however, she was aware that Mary like herself was a sovereign princess: the death of one princess might strike at them all.

Too little is known of Elizabeth's inner feelings for Mary, since the English queen had learnt in childhood to hide all inner feelings, those dangerous traitors, within the breast. That closeness which two queens and near cousins should feel for each other, so often chanted by Mary, may have found more echoes in Elizabeth's heart than she ever admitted. In the meantime this merciful strain, this sneaking affection, could not fail to be noticed by Elizabeth's advisers: the point was taken that if ever the execution of Mary Stuart was to be secured, Elizabeth would have to be thoroughly convinced that her good sister had repaid her clemency with flagrant and harmful ingratitude.

He was appointed Chief Remembrancer of the Exchequer of Ireland by James II, and a member of the Privy Council. In 1689 he represented Ballynakill, Queen's County, in Parliament. During the Civil War he kept the esteem of both parties but was loyal to the House of Stewart. In 1696, through the petition of neighboring gentry, he secured a pardon for his attachment to that cause. He founded Arls Church, and was buried in its chapel on the site of which the Grace Mausoleum now stands.

The origin most commonly assigned to Grey, or Gray, is the nickname meaning "grey-haired" or "grey complexioned." But the surname has also a locality derivation, and those genealogists who trace the descent of the Barons Grey from Rollo or Fulbert, Chamberlain to Robert, Duke of Normandy, who received from his lord the castle of Croy in Picardy, believe that "de Croy" came to be written "de Grey" in English records. D'Anisy, author of "Recherches sur le Domesday," however, believes that the family came from Grai or Gray, a village near Caen.

DAWLEY (?)

(Ibid.)

VIII. Henry de Grey, son of John and Hawis de Grey, had from Henry III a grant of the manor of Thurrock in Essex and also received lands from Robert, Lord Bardolf.

Henry de Grey married Isolda de Bardolf, daughter and heisess of Hugh, Lord Bardolf.

Children:

1. Richard, married Lucia Humes.
2. John, of whom further.
3. William.

(Ibid.)

IX. John de Grey, son of Henry and Isolda (de Bardolf) de Grey, died in 1266.

He married (first) Emma de Glanvile, daughter of Geoffrey de Glanvile. He married (second) Joane, widow of Paul de Peyvre.

Children of the first marriage:

1. Reginald, of whom further.
2. A daughter, married Robert de Tatshall.

(Ibid.)

X. Reginald de Grey, first Baron Grey de Wilton, son of John and Emma (de Glanvile) de Grey, died in 1308. He was sheriff of Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire, governor of Nottingham Castle, and in 1281 was made Justice of Chester. In 1295 he was summoned to Parliament as Lord Grey of Ruthyn and Wilton.

Reginald de Grey married Maud de Longchamp, daughter of Henry de Longchamp, Baron of Wilton.

Son:

1. John, of whom further.

(Ibid. G. E. Cokayne: "Complete Peerage," Vol. VI, p. 173.)

XI. John de Grey, second Baron Grey de Wilton, son of Reginald and Maud (de Longchamp) de Grey, was born in 1268 and died in 1323. He was justice of North Wales, governor of Carnarvon Castle, and one of the lords ordainers in 1310. A prominent figure in English politics during the reign of Edward II, he was summoned to Parliament in 1317 as Lord Grey of Ruthyn and Wilton.

John de Grey married (first) Anne de Ferrers, daughter of William, Lord Ferrers of Groby. He married (second) Maud Basset, daughter of Ralph, Lord Basset of Drayton, who was summoned to Parliament in 1299.

Son of the first marriage:

1. Henry, third Baron Grey de Wilton, married Ann Rockby.

Children of the second marriage:

2. Roger, of whom further.
3. Maud, married John, Lord Moels.

(Ibid.)

XII. Roger de Grey, first Baron Grey de Ruthyn, son of John and Maud (Basset) de Grey, died March 6, 1353. In 1322 he served in the Parliament at York, and in 1323-1324 was summoned as Lord Grey de Ruthyn. In 1327 he accompanied Edmund, Earl of Kent, on the Scottish campaign of that year, and in 1331 the custody of the castle of Abergavenny was bestowed upon him. He rendered much military service, and in 1341 was fighting in Scotland. In 1352 he acted as Commissioner of Array for Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire.

Roger de Grey married Elizabeth de Hastings. (De Hastings IX.)

Children:

1. John.
2. Reginald (1), of whom further.
3. Joane, married William Patshall.
4. Julian.
5. Maud, married a member of the de la Roche family.

XIII. Reginald (1) de Grey, second Baron Grey de Ruthyn, son of Roger and Elizabeth (de Hastings) de Grey, died in 1388. He was commander of all the castles and forts in Wales which belonged to the King, and in 1377 was summoned to Parliament as Lord Grey de Ruthyn.

Reginald (1) de Grey married Eleanor Strange, daughter of Lord Strange, of Blackmere.

Children:

1. Reginald (2), of whom further.
2. Eleanor, married William Lucy of Charlecote.

(W. Segar and J. Edmondson: "Baronagium Genealogicum," Vol. I, p. 77. T. C. Banks: "Dormant and Extinct Baronage of England," Vol. II, pp. 238-40.)

XIV. Reginald or Reynold (2) de Grey, third Baron Grey de Ruthyn, son of Reginald (1) and Eleanor (Strange) de Grey, was born in 1362 and died September 30, 1440. He succeeded to the title in 1388, and in October, 1389, was summoned to Parliament as Lord Grey de Ruthyn. In 1394 he accompanied Richard II on his expedition to Ireland, and there claimed the lordship of Wexford. In 1398 he was Governor of Ireland for a short period. In 1410, after a long dispute, he recovered from Sir Edward de Hastings, in the Court of Chivalry, the right to use the name and arms of Lord Hastings. In that same year he was Admiral of England, and in 1415 was a member of the council which governed England during the absence in France of Henry V.

Reginald or Reynold (2) de Grey married (first) Margaret de Ros. (De Ros IX, Child 2.) He married (second) Joan Astley. (Astley IX.)

Son of the first marriage:

1. John, K. G., married Constance de Holand or Holland, daughter of John de Holand or Holland, Duke of Exeter.

Children of the second marriage:

2. Edward, married Elizabeth de Ferrers, daughter of Henry, Lord Ferrers.
3. John (again).
4. Robert, of whom further.

(Ibid. L. Stephen and S. Lee, Editors: "Dictionary of National Biography," Vol. VIII, p. 640. G. E. Cokayne: "Complete Peerage," Vol. VI, p. 158.)

XV. Robert Grey, the "de" now being omitted, of Whittington and Enville or Enfield, Staffordshire, son of Reginald and Joan (Astley) de Grey, married Eleanor Lowe, in whose right he succeeded to Whittington and Enville. She was the daughter and sole heiress of Humphrey Lowe, of Whittington and Enville, and his wife Alice Botener or Butener, daughter of William Botener, of Withybrooke in Warkwickshire.

Sons:

1. Humphrey, of whom further.
2. Henry.

(H. F. J. Vaughan: "The Mitton and Ludlow Pedigrees," in "Transactions of the Shropshire Archæological and Natural History Society," Vol. IX, p. 276. S. Erdeswick: "A Survey of Staffordshire," pp. 379-382. S. Shaw: "History and Antiquities of Staffordshire," Vol. II, part 1, pp. 264, 268. "Visitation of the County of Warwick in the Year 1619," in "Harleian Society Publications," Vol. XII, p. 43. T. Blore: "History and Antiquities of the County of Rutland," p. 166.)

XVI. Humphrey Grey, of Whittington and Enville, son of Robert and Eleanor (Lowe) Grey, died in 1499-1500.

He married Anne Fielding, daughter of Sir William Fielding, of Newnham Paddox, Warwickshire.

Children:

1. Edward, of whom further.
2. Robert.
3. Margery, married Richard Sambark or St. Barby.
4. Elizabeth, married Sampson Erdeswick.
5. Mary, married John Dixwell or Creswell.

(Ibid.)

XVII. Sir Edward Grey, of Whittington and Enville, son of Humphrey and Anne (Fielding) Grey, died in 1528-29. He was aged twenty-eight at the death of his father, and in 1524-25 was sheriff of Staffordshire.

Sir Edward Grey married (first) Joyce, claimed by some writers as the daughter of John Hoorde or Horde, by others as the daughter of Mr. Whorwood, variously described as of Bridgnorth, Shropshire, and of Compton, Staffordshire. He married (second) Elizabeth Erdeswick, daughter of Sampson Erdeswick. It is not known which of the following children were of the first marriage and which of the second:

1. Richard.
2. Francis.
3. Thomas, married Anne Verney.
4. Robert.
5. Joyce, married William or John Whorwood.
6. Cassandra, married William or John Whorwood.
7. Jane, married Mr. Kinaston.
8. Anne or Agnes, of whom further.

(Ibid.)

XVIII. Anne or Agnes Grey, daughter of Sir Edward Grey, married, as his first wife, Richard (2) Mytton, sheriff of Shropshire. (Mytton VII.)

(S. Leighton: "Mytton Manuscripts," in "Collections Historical and Archæological Relating to Montgomeryshire," Vol. VII, p. 354. C. H. Drinkwater: "The Parish of Habberley," and H. F. J. Vaughan: "The Mitton and Ludlow Pedigrees," in "Transactions of the Shropshire Archæological and Natural History Society," Vol. VIII, pp. 200, 202; Vol. IX, pp. 271, 276.)

(The Grosvenor Line).

This noble house traces its descent in the male line to a family which is stated to have flourished in Normandy for a century and a half before the Conquest of England, and obtained its surname from having held the high and powerful office, in that principality, of "le Grovenour," meaning great hunter.

(H. Harrison: "Surnames of the United Kingdom.")

I. Adam de Grovenor lived during the reign of Edward I of England, 1272-1307. He married Margery.

Child:

1. William (1), of whom further.

(J. Morris: "Grosvenor," in "The Herald and Genealogist," Vol. V, pp. 33, 35, 46-47.)

II. William (1) de Grovenor, son of Adam and Margery de Grovenor, resided in the parish of Claverly, Shropshire, England.

Child:

1. Richard (1), of whom further.

About FamilySearch Pedigree Resource File:

The Pedigree Resource File is a new lineage linked database of records available on compact disc containing family history records submitted by individuals through FamilySearch Internet Genealogy Service. Family information is organized in family groups and pedigrees and includes submitted notes and sources. Many charts and reports can be printed from this data. Each disc contains about 1.1 million names. With the publication of every five discs, a master index for those discs will be published and packaged with that set of discs. With the publication of every 25 discs, a master index for those discs will also be published and packaged with that volume of discs. Discs may be purchased as sets or volumes.

Please Note:

Submitter information is provided to help in the coordination of personal family history research. Use of this information for any other purpose, including marketing, advertising, or commercial solicitation, is strictly prohibited.

About FamilySearch Pedigree Resource File:
The Pedigree Resource File is a new lineage linked database of records available on compact disc containing family history records submitted by individuals through FamilySearch Internet Genealogy Service. Family information is organized in family groups and pedigrees and includes submitted notes and sources. Many charts and reports can be printed from this data. Each disc contains about 1.1 million names. With the publication of every five discs, a master index for those discs will be published and packaged with that set of discs. With the publication of every 25 discs, a master index for those discs will also be published and packaged with that volume of discs. Discs may be purchased as sets or volumes.

Please Note:
Submitter information is provided to help in the coordination of personal family history research. Use of this information for any other purpose, including marketing, advertising, or commercial solicitation, is strictly prohibited.

About FamilySearch Pedigree Resource File:
The Pedigree Resource File is a new lineage linked database of records available on compact disc containing family history records submitted by individuals through FamilySearch Internet Genealogy Service. Family information is organized in family groups and pedigrees and includes submitted notes and sources. Many charts and reports can be printed from this data. Each disc contains about 1.1 million names. With the publication of every five discs, a master index for those discs will be published and packaged with that set of discs. With the publication of every 25 discs, a master index for those discs will also be published and packaged with that volume of discs. Discs may be purchased as sets or volumes.
